1. A press release from Pearson plc announcing Pearson to Increase Stake in Maskew Miller Longman

23 October 2008

PEARSON TO INCREASE STAKE IN MASKEW MILLER LONGMAN

**:
Steps up investment in education in Africa

Pearson, the international education and media company, today announces that it has agreed to increase its stake in Maskew Miller Longman (MML), and to bring together its education companies in the region into a new organisation, Pearson Southern Africa.

MML is one of South Africa's leading educational publishers and is currently 50% owned by Pearson and 50% owned by Caxton and CTP Publishers and Printers Ltd. MML serves the school, higher education, professional and adult education markets in South Africa and 10 countries in southern, central and east Africa. MML publishes across the school curriculum and in over 50 languages. Maskew Miller was founded in 1893 in Cape Town and merged with Pearson's Longman South Africa to form MML in 1983.

Under the terms of the agreement, which is subject to regulatory approval, Pearson would increase its stake in MML to 85%. In return, Caxton would receive a consideration of £45.5 million in cash and a 15% stake in the newly-created Pearson Southern Africa.

Pearson Southern Africa would consist of
Maskew Miller Longman, Heinemann South Africa

and

Heinemann Botswana

, publishers for the school, higher education and vocational markets, and the South African operations of Edexcel

, Pearson's international academic and vocational assessment and qualifications company.

South Africa

recently completed a major school curriculum reform and is now focused on ensuring that these reforms lead to higher levels of educational achievement across all sectors of the community, especially in literacy and numeracy. The country is also reforming the further education and training sector, with the aim of improving work-related skills and increasing participation in higher education.

Across

Southern Africa

, there is rapid growth in participation in all levels of education. The UN's Millennium Development Goals, agreed in 2000, include a commitment to free and universal primary education by 2015. According to the Commission for Africa, the proportion of children in primary school in sub-Saharan Africa increased by 48% between 1990 and 2001, in turn increasing demand for secondary and vocational education, but there are still 40 million primary-age children who are out of school.

UNESCO estimates that the region will need 1.6 million new teachers - an increase of more than two-thirds - to meet the commitment to universal primary education.

Pearson is the world's leading education publishing and services company, with significant expertise and resources in educational content, technology, assessment and related services. Pearson believes that this combination of its education companies in southern would significantly enhance its ability to support educators, teachers and students throughout the region. Pearson intends to increase its investment in the region, building new services in critical areas of educational need including teacher development, student assessment and professional and vocational learning.

Fathima Dada, the current executive chairman of Maskew Miller Longman, would be the chief executive of Pearson Southern Africa.

In recent years both MML and Heinemann have made good progress in implementing a range of BEE (Black Economic Empowerment) initiatives relating to management, employment equity, skills development, procurement, enterprise and socio-economic development. Pearson will build on this progress and plans to engage with a BEE equity partner focusing on deepening links with the world of education.

"Effective education will be central to

South Africa

's continued economic and social progress, and we are committed to playing our part,"

said John Fallon, chief executive officer of International Education at Pearson.

"This is the latest in a series of investments we are making to create

Africa

's leading education enterprise, developing the very best local talent and expertise and applying Pearson's worldwide resources. It will enable us to do much more to help people across to make progress in their lives through education.

Africa

Over the last 25 years our partnership with Caxton has proved very successful; we are pleased that they will continue to be involved in the future growth of this newly expanded organisation."

Pearson is also the owner of Penguin books, which has been publishing South African authors since 1989; the Financial Times

Edgar Filing: PEARSON PLC - Form 6-K

newspaper, printed in South Africa since 2002; and 50% of BDFM, publishers of Business Day, the Financial Mail and Summit Television. Pearson is a leading education company across Africa, and in August announced the acquisition of an additional 22% stake in Longman

Nigeria

, taking its ownership to a controlling 51% stake, subject to regulatory approval.
