While my focus today is on our 2007 results, I'd like to take a moment to comment on our definitive agreement to acquire the New York Mercantile Exchange that we recently announced.

The potential transaction with NYMEX builds on our existing trading technology agreement from April 2006. It allows customers around the world to benefit from access to NYMEX's benchmark energy and metals products on CME Globex, and provides a stronger foundation for us to build on our proven track records of growth and innovation.

Additionally, joining with NYMEX further builds CME Group's presence in New York, and in locations where energy and metals products are central to risk management strategies, particularly in the Middle East and Asia.

Since coming onto the CME Globex platform, average daily electronic volume of NYMEX products has increased every quarter, and so far in 2008 is running at more than 1 million contracts.

CME Group has a proven ability to integrate large scale businesses. In addition to the $60 million of operating expense synergies that are expected from the combination, the deal will enable us to provide increased efficiencies and new trading opportunities for customers around the world as well as enhance shareholder value.

The definitive agreement between CME Group and NYMEX provides great value for all participants in the futures arena.

Shareholders from both companies will benefit from increased growth opportunities, and an overall reduction of operating costs. End users will benefit from the increased liquidity and diverse product offerings similar to the benefits of the CBOT transaction.

Also, clearing firms will benefit significantly from the freeing up of significant capital through the combination of the clearing operations, operational and developmental savings, combined shareholder requirements, and from streamlined customer service.

In conclusion, our business thrives on competition. We expect to continue to innovate, broaden our reach and provide our customers with leading edge risk management products. We will continue to focus on customer service and efficiencies to provide the lowest cost liquidity.
