The following is a transcript of a video posted on the internal website of The Southern Company on August 24, 2015

This video contains forward-looking statements. Please see the note regarding forward-looking statements at www.doingenergybetter.com.

Thomas A. Fanning, Southern Company Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer:

Good morning. I'm Southern Company Chairman, President and CEO Tom Fanning, and I'm joined here today by AGL Resources Chairman and CEO, John Somerhalder. We are thrilled to spend a few minutes with you to discuss today's exciting news.

Over the past year or so, I have routinely discussed Southern Company's interest in exploring natural gas infrastructure. And for good reason.

Before I became chairman, natural gas accounted for 16 percent of our energy mix. Today it accounts for nearly half of the electricity we generate. And that rapid growth is in line with a trend seen across the industry.

Factor in the technology revolution taking place in energy production, environmental regulations calling for increased natural gas generation and the potential for LNG to harmonize worldwide commodity prices, it's clear that now is the time to invest in natural gas.

And today, I'm pleased to say that's just what we're doing.

This morning, Southern Company and AGL Resources jointly announced that we are combining to create America's leading energy company. Our combined company will have 11 regulated electric and natural gas distribution companies in 9 different states providing electric and natural gas service to approximately nine million customers, as well as retail operations across America.

Combine Southern Company's recent shift to natural gas with AGL Resources' extensive gas delivery businesses - well you have a company platform to invest in gas infrastructure that is critical to meet our customers' energy needs today and in America's energy future.

But this strategic combination is about more than size - it's about bringing together two like-minded companies with a track record of success. Both companies are committed to safely providing the families who depend on us with reliable and affordable energy - and that will not change.

John W. Somerhalder, AGL Resources Inc. Chairman and Chief Executive Officer:

That's right, Tom. We are committed to the customers and communities we serve. Driven by this shared commitment, our combined team of more than 31,000 employees will be uniquely positioned to deliver on their energy needs. And by bringing together two of Georgia's leading corporate citizens, we will be better prepared to make a difference in our states, in our region and beyond.

With our customer focus serving as the foundation, we believe this combination positions us for continued success in all aspects of our business.

Today, AGL Resources is investing $650 million in several pipeline projects that are helping deliver much-needed fuel to key regions of the country. On the electric side, Southern has committed more than $20 billion to prepare for America's energy future, investing in nuclear, 21st century coal, renewables and energy efficiency - in addition to gas.

Our two companies are likeminded in our customer commitment, likeminded in our infrastructure development and likeminded in our approach. And I'm looking forward to continuing to lead AGL Resources' operations - and apply lessons learned from Southern Company when we combine.

Fanning:

And there are lessons to be learned on both sides. We are all successful because of our employees, and we look forward to speaking with you and hearing from you as we go through the process of combining our companies.

Beyond the similarities we've discussed, we expect this combination to deliver a long-term value proposition to shareholders. We believe the addition of AGL Resources to the Southern Company family will strengthen our ability to achieve our goal of regular, predictable and sustainable earnings growth.

We encourage you to read through the material posted internally and on our website, doingenergybetter.com, to learn more about the many benefits of this combination and the process of bringing our companies together.

After receiving the necessary approvals, we believe this combination will be complete in the second half of 2016. While certain details and decisions will continue beyond that time, we will communicate with you as decisions are made. As we begin our journey together, let me assure you that John and I are committed to maintaining the high-performing workforce necessary to best serve our customers.

Earlier, I mentioned the name of our website, Doing Energy Better. You know, this was also the theme of this year's Southern Company annual report - and it's more than a tag line. It's an illustration of our shared commitment to make energy better, to move energy better and to help customers use energy better to have a better quality of life. And together, we will always find better ways to meet customers' evolving needs. And this strategic combination will reinforce Southern Company's push to look beyond electricity to find new ways to serve customers.

I look forward to meeting with you soon and to being a part of your team in the years ahead.

Thank you for all that you're doing to deliver on our shared commitment to the customers we are privileged to serve.
