NOTICE OF CORRECTION

Istanbul, Turkey: July 18, 2003--Turkcell (NYSE:TKC, ISE: TCELL), is correcting an error in the press release dated 17 July 2003 with respect to the update on the interconnection dispute with Turk Telekom.

Yesterday, Turkcell reported that the Ankara Seventh Commercial Court decided that Turk Telekom's decision to offset against the amount of interconnect payments due to Turkcell its receivables in accordance with its claim that interconnect revenues should be shared equally, would be unlawful.

In addition, Turkcell also reported that the Court decided that an injunction preventing this offset would remain until a new agreement has been reached and until then the terms of the above Interconnect Agreement remain in effect.

As reported yesterday, the Ankara Seventh Commercial Court has decided that this offset was unlawful. However, the decision of the Ankara Seventh Commercial Court does not require an injunction preventing this offset to remain. Although an injunction preventing Turk Telekom from such offset is not in place, the decision of the Ankara Seventh Commercial Court requires that until a new agreement with respect to interconnection revenues has been reached between Turkcell and Turk Telekom the terms of the current interconnection agreement, which do not allow such offset, would remain in effect.
