Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Comments on the Amegy transaction. As you know, I think most of you probably know, the Amegy shareholders overwhelmingly approved the transaction on October 12, excuse me, October 11. The Federal Reserve received two protests to our application prior to the end of the public comment period, one from the Credit Union National Association was reported widely in the press. The other was a more traditional CRA-type protest. We have responded to those protests. We are waiting for now for the Fed to decide what its next step is. The based on our current expectations, we still anticipate, most likely, that the transaction will close in the fourth quarter, probably late November to mid-December. There is a slight possibility that we will elect might elect to delay the closing until the first day of January if this slips too late into the quarter.

I can't comment specifically on Amegy's performance for the quarter. I will comment that we are pleased with how it is performing and how the integration planning effort is going. As we move forward we've encountered no major glitches or concerns either about the integration or the things that could impede the closing of the transaction. For those who are interested in Amegy's performance, they plan to release earnings late in the day next Monday, October 24, and will hold a conference call on Tuesday, October 25, at 11:30 Eastern time. And I can give you the call-in number during the Q&A if you want, or you can get it off their website.

So core operations remain, I think by all measures very good, and with very solid performance. Having said that I will note that next quarter, if it does include the close of the Amegy transaction, will include a significant number of large unusual items all the purchase accounting adjustments, severance charges, restructuring charges, et cetera, that will be related to the Amegy close as well as the beginnings of some of the balance sheet restructuring that we have talked about. So next quarter's results, while we have every expectation that the core performance of the Company will remain strong, may be harder to decipher as a result of those items.

Hi. We just had a quick question on in terms of the transaction. Just a question, why is there such a wide range in closing? Is there anything else other than the Federal Reserve that needs to get done for this transaction to close?

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

No, nothing that's the only approval remaining. The shareholders have approved, the cash stock election forms for the Amegy shareholders to make their election will be mailed out, I think, next week, prior to the end of October. They get 30 days to make that election. So that's another dating item for the close. We have to give them at least 30 days. So that would push it out to late November, but the remaining real uncertainty is whether the Fed will elect to extend their decision time frame again any further beyond I think it's November 6, or 9, somewhere in that frame, but they have the right to do that if they decide they want more information. We have no indication that they will do so at this time. I'm just hedging a little bit and being polite to the Fed and not in any way trying to pre-empt their process on this call.

Bryan Long Chesapeake Partners Analyst

I got you. Just a follow-up to that, what's kind of the drop-dead date in December where you may defer to January 1? Do you have a sense of that? Or is it just ?

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Don't have a drop-dead date, but as we get into the Christmas-New Year period, we have a judgment call to make. We are an accelerated filer under the SEC's new rules, which means we have to file our 2005 10-Q by, what, the end of February, right?

Bryan Long, Chesapeake Partners Analyst

Right.

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

And so with all of the purchase accounting adjustments and everything else that it takes if we get too late in the quarter, to make where we're running a risk that we might just not get all of that right, we might just kick it over to 12:01 a.m. on January 1, even if we have the approvals. But it's purely kind of a risk mitigation, because we don't want to screw up the SEC deadline.

Bryan Long, Chesapeake Partners Analyst

Thank you very much.

Jacqueline Reeves, Ryan Beck Analyst

Terrific. And then lastly, the could you just remind us if there's been any change or an update with respect to the reserve accounting as it relates to the closing of the Amegy deal?

---

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Oh, you mean the loan loss reserve in the ?

---

Jacqueline Reeves, Ryan Beck Analyst

Right.

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Yes, SOP 03-3. Well SOP 03-3 remains in effect so there's no update there. I guess as we get into this more, the impact may be less than I would have thought and may have, by some of my comments, led to you think earlier. We haven't fully reached a conclusion with our auditors and other interested parties yet, but it appears that the focus will be mostly on nonperforming loans and loans that might be classified, perhaps not even criticized, otherwise impaired, as opposed to impacting the reserve across all loan categories, including good quality performing loans. So if you go back to June 30, results for Amegy or stay tuned for next week, I don't have those numbers in front of me, but, (and couldn't tell you even if I did), but just go back to the June 30 numbers, their credit quality in general was pretty good as well. So if you look at their nonperforming loan totals, you can probably get an indication, in relation to the whole portfolio that the impact may not be too great. Beyond that, I can't quantify it. There will be some, but it may not be as much as I thought initially.

Jacqueline Reeves, Ryan Beck Analyst

That's terrific. Thank you.

A couple of questions for you. First, I was kind of curious to get your thoughts on how long you think you can continue to generate at least positive, modest-positive operating leverage. I think you've kept the compensation expense in particular under wraps pretty well, but with the type of loan growth that you've been generating, I would imagine that it becomes harder and harder to do. So, kind of your thinking on how long this is going to play out. It would be harder to see with the Amegy deal, obviously. The second thing is [will] you talk about where the growth in your construction portfolio is coming from. You've obviously had very strong growth in that area over the last several quarters. Trying to figure out if that's residential, commercial, which markets. Thanks.

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

How do we have operating leverage? Well, you put your finger on the key. And it's after we close the Amegy transaction, the efficiency ratio is going to tick back up again almost immediately. Their efficiency ratio last quarter was in the mid to upper 60, 67% I think again, I don't have that number in front of me compared to a bit over 54% for us. The goal over the next two years will be to sort of get back to where we are now, while digesting the Amegy acquisition, so the focus will be on efficiency improvements there. We don't think there's any immediate limit to our ability to generate positive leverage, operating leverage in our own franchise, either, but that will be masked, as you point out by Amegy. So most immediately, if we close in well, whenever we close, probably first full quarter at a minimum will be the first quarter of next year and you will see a higher efficiency ratio out of it as we've long said.

Heather Wolf, Merrill Lynch Analyst

Hi, there. I'm wondering as you are starting to integrate Amegy, I'm wondering if there's any change to the estimated EPS impact?

---

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Well, we never gave explicit EPS guidance. We derived it off of IBIS estimates, but I will I guess I would point out that we've probably performed equal to or better than IBIS estimates ourselves, and so that may indicate that the absolute levels going forward could be a little bit better, but that the impact may be similar to what we talked about. I don't know if you could decipher what I said. We've seen nothing that indicates that Amegy will be more or less of a drag on us in the early quarters than we indicated.

Harris Simmons, Zions Bancorp Chairman, President, CEO

I'd just add that with where we are in the integration planning I think we remain very comfortable with the targets that we'd set in terms of the efficiencies that we would achieve and those projects are by and large on track. We would expect that we should be able to complete systems conversions, we hoped, in February. That may slip back a month or so, but we'd hoped that by roughly the end of the first quarter that we'd be able to have the systems conversions completed and start to realize some of the attendant savings. We're comfortable with the progress we're making and relative to the early just the guidance we gave at the time of the announcement of the deal.

Joe Morford, RBC Capital Markets Analyst

Thanks. Doyle, pretty much everything has been asked. But I just had a quick follow-up on the review what the impact of options expense will be in '06. It looked like to the first six months it was running about $0.05 a share, so should we say $0.10 on an annual basis, and does Amegy affect that at all?

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

Well, you'd have to go look at I think, yes, your math is right, as it relates to us. Amegy's own disclosures about its option costs were they expensed had they been expensing it, their footnote disclosures, I have no reason to quarrel with. Those options will be converted into Zions options on a deal-equivalent basis (probably not the exact right terminology), so that cost will carry over and apply to our expense as well. But I don't have a quantifiable I have not added that together to tell you what it's going to look like next year.

Doyle Arnold, Zions Bancorp Vice Chairman, CFO

All right. I think that's it. We do appreciate all of you attending, and your good questions. Again, most likely the fourth quarter will have a few more interesting line items on both the balance sheet and the income statement to talk about as they relate to the Amegy close, but in general the underlying trends here we think are pretty positive. So look forward to talking to you in January and have a good Thanksgiving, all.
