Item 7.01. Regulation FD Disclosure.

PRA Group is aware that the United States Supreme Court today declined to grant certiorari and review the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Madden v. Midland Funding, LLC, 786 F.3d 246 (2nd Cir. 2015). As a result, the court let stand the Appeals Court's finding that the National Bank Act did not preempt New York's state usury law for an assignee of a loan originated by a national bank because the assignee was not itself a national bank or collecting the debt on behalf of a national bank.

The company believes Madden will have little or no impact on its purchase and recovery of defaulted consumer credit card accounts.

PRA Group has taken an increasingly conservative approach to charging interest over the years, limiting or foregoing interest charges in the U.S. well before that became an industry trend. Other than postjudgment interest awarded by a court in collection litigation, the company does not assess interest charges on its domestic unsecured consumer accounts, regardless of whether its agreement with the selling credit grantor entitles it to or not. Court ordered interest is determined by state statutes or rules of court and awarded when deemed appropriate by a judge. The company has also refrained from purchasing accounts from online marketplace lenders, whose business models have been the subject of some commentary in light of Madden. Madden's effect on how marketplace lenders originate, recover or sell loans is immaterial to PRA Group.

PRA Group common stock has been proudly traded on the NASDAQ stock market since November, 2002, through many industry and market changes. The company supports the notion of thorough research into its business prospects, particularly when such research and discussion is fair and accurate.
