Letter to the editor of the Harrisburg Patriot-News

Verizon's acquisition of MCI is hardly a death knell for telecom competition in Pennsylvania, as your coverage would lead readers to believe ( Now hear this, Feb. 15).

Rather, the Verizon-MCI deal is a strategic response to the sea change that has occurred in the communications industry. New providers cable, wireless and Internet-based phone companies and new technologies wireless, e-mail, text and instant messaging all carry phone traffic that once rode exclusively on the wired telephone network. Competition from these new providers and new technologies has effectively eliminated the distinction between local and long-distance calling and broken the communications market wide open.

However, some shortsighted critics stubbornly focus only on competition in Pennsylvania's ever-shrinking traditional wired telephone business, thereby ignoring how these real-world technologies have reshaped the market and given consumers and businesses more choices, better service and lower prices.

The Verizon-MCI deal creates a strong competitor in this radically changed market and will help our company become a national broadband service provider. We will be better positioned to compete in this market and continue to bring advanced communications services to Pennsylvania businesses and consumers faster and more economically. And that's good for Pennsylvanians.
