Employee FAQ

The purpose of this document is to provide answers to questions of LogMeIn employees. It will be updated whenever we have additional information.

General

Why is LogMeIn merging with GoTo?

This transaction marks the beginning of what we see as an amazing new chapter for our company. Together we'll become one of the world's top 10 SaaS companies – a market leader with over $1 billion in revenue, nearly 3,000 employees and more than 2 million customers in virtually every country across the globe. First and foremost, this deal accelerates our strategy. Over the past year, we've talked a lot about our growth strategy and aspirations, namely our desire to define the future of our three core markets while doubling the size of our business. We see this deal as a rare opportunity to accelerate this plan, and in the process fundamentally redefine and lead our industry.

We believe that when you combine GoTo's broad customer base, business-tested products, and brand recognition with LogMeIn's renowned focus on user experience, proven ability to win millions of users, and our deep experience running a growth business, you have a recipe for disruption. Specifically, we believe we will have the combined strengths required to:

1. Combine the world's best user experience with a seamless communications platform to transform the way people collaborate

2. Enable simple and secure access for people and businesses as they evolve to an app and cloud-centric world
3. Empower companies to reimagine customer engagement and support across all digital channels, devices, and media

Is this a merger or an acquisition?

This deal is a merger. More specifically, it is an RMT (Reverse Morris Trust).

Following the transaction, Citrix equity holders will own approximately 50.1% of all outstanding shares of LogMeIn on a fully diluted basis, while LogMeIn's existing shareholders will own approximately 49.9% of the company.

What will happen to the respective leadership teams? Will the LogMeIn team lead the combined company?

Bill Wagner and Ed Herdiech will continue to serve as the company's CEO and CFO, respectively, following the transaction.

LogMeIn and GoTo are currently working to identify the full management team following the transaction.

We expect the executive team and broader leadership team to include representatives from both companies.

Until the closing of the transaction, LogMeIn's leadership team will run LogMeIn and GoTo's leadership team will run GoTo

What name/brand will the new combined entity carry? Will the company be LogMeIn? GoTo? Something else?

We expect there will be a single parent brand for the new entity, but that brand and the timing of its rollout is still to be determined.

There is inherent product and business overlap. Do you expect to consolidate the product lines?

This merger gives us the opportunity to completely rethink the way we go to market in transformative ways. While we don't have all the answers, specific product decisions will be made by the combined management team after closing.

In these cases, it's typical to look at products in three ways:

1. Some products may be rebranded and kept as-is
2. For some, taking the best of features and functions, and roll them up into a new product
3. In some cases, discontinue products

An integration team will be formed that includes representatives from both LogMeIn and GoTo to help us start a planning process for things like products, that will guide how we bring the two businesses together.

No decisions have been made regarding products.

As we embark on this journey, customers should expect that their products will be supported for the foreseeable future

It seems like this merger is focused on our collaboration, identify and access management, and customer engagement and support markets, what happens with products like Xively?

We currently have no plans to change our course with Xively

In fact, Xively is coming off its best quarter ever and has had a very good first half of the year

We have and continue to believe that the IoT will have a meaningful impact on virtually every market in which we play today

We've also been talking about the Support of Things and our long term strategy to redefine how company's engage with their customers and their products

While it's too early to comment on specific future innovation in the combined company, we can say that both R&D teams see the IoT as a critical trend

And we believe that Xively, as a pioneering IoT platform, is providing beneficial learnings for the business as a whole, specifically in the Support of Things, where both companies already have early offerings within their customer engagement and support portfolios (Rescue Lens)

We believe that our Xively experience, today, will benefit our IoT platform business, our Support of Things innovation, and very likely, other key areas of the business

Should we expect that LogMeIn's culture will change?

The combination brings together two innovative cultures and both companies will play a role in contributing to the building of a new and distinct culture. We expect to bring together the best of both companies cultures, while creating new aspects to our culture to support our new business.

At our cores, LogMeIn and GoTo both have a focus on the possibilities and outcomes our technology delivers for people: LogMeIn seeks to simplify the way people connect to each other and the world around us and GoTo believes that human connections are at the core of everything they do.

Having a fantastic culture absolutely remains a goal of ours

How will GoTo's employees be integrated into the company?

An integration team will be formed that includes representatives from both LogMeIn and GoTo to help us start a planning process that will guide how we bring the two businesses together.

We will be as transparent and thoughtful as possible through the transition process and will communicate regular updates.

Will there be any change or disruption to day-to-day activities at LogMeIn?

As we move forward in the coming months, we urge your continued focus on today's business

The important thing is to remain focused on working together to achieve our objectives in 2016, and know that as new information becomes available, our management team is committed to being as transparent and thoughtful as possible

How many people will be negatively impacted by this transaction?

Any evaluation of future roles will come as part of the integration planning process, which has not started yet.

What kinds of issues could come up to prevent the transaction from closing?

The transaction is expected to close during the first quarter of 2017 and requires approval by LogMeIn shareholders. The transaction is subject to certain regulatory approvals and other customary closing conditions, including approvals required under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act.

We are committed to working closely with relevant regulatory authorities to ensure that this transaction is closed in a timely manner and are confident that LogMeIn shareholders will recognize the tremendous opportunity of these two companies together.

When do we expect the deal to close?

We expect the deal to close in early 2017.

My Job, Benefits and Salary

Could my job be eliminated? When would I know?

Part of this merger is based on the idea that the companies could drive meaningful synergies together, given inherent overlap. Will that overlap include people? Yes, but people are only one part. A large part of the overlap and resulting synergies will be things like marketing spend, vendor contacts, internal systems integration, etc.

No decisions have been made on synergies, people or otherwise. Know that as new information becomes available, our management team is committed to being as transparent and thoughtful as possible.

This is a significant and rare opportunity for our company and our employees to shape a market leader. Deals like this create inherent uncertainty and complexity, but a transaction of this size creates opportunities for career development and growth. We will always value people who step up and help solve problems, taking on ownership and challenges.

Will my salary and benefits change?

Because we will operate as two independent companies until the proposed transaction closes, your LogMeIn benefits package will remain as it is today until close.

Open Enrollment will occur as part of our standard operating procedure in Fall 2016.

As always, HR will communicate with employees to address key initiatives and milestones related to benefits and compensation.

What happens to my stock and stock options? Can I continue to trade LogMeIn stock?

There will be no changes to any LogMeIn equity you currently own. You will continue to be subject to blackout periods as usual. If there are changes to these periods, we will communicate them.

Will all of GoTo's and LogMeIn's employees be joining the new company?

We do expect some overlap in skill sets and responsibilities, and as a result, we anticipate that some roles will change and some roles will be eliminated following the close.

A transition team is being created, and as part of integration planning, we will institute a careful and thoughtful process to identify potential redundancies in staff.

The respective LogMeIn and GoTo leaders both want to make this as transparent as possible, and will provide regular updates to their respective employees on both the process and related timing.

Do you plan to consolidate or close offices, and if so, where? When?

It's not uncommon with mergers of this scale to see some consolidation in facilities, especially in redundant facilities in common locations. Boston will continue to be the Company's headquarters following the closing of the transaction. No other decisions have been made yet, and nothing would happen prior to the close of the deal.

Any decisions on facilities would come following a careful and thoughtful integration planning process, which hasn't started.

Will there be a retention plan?

We see retention of talent as a key goal and expect to work closely with our managers, employees and the integration team that will be formed, on a variety of efforts aimed at retaining staff.

In the case of redundant positions, how will decisions be made about which employees stay and which leave?

Any decisions on roles would come following a careful and thoughtful integration planning process, which hasn't started.

That said, the integration team will be looking at the best fit for the right role, irrespective of original team.

How many people will be impacted?

Any evaluation of future roles will come as part of the integration planning process.

Integration

How will the integration process work?

An integration team will be formed that includes representatives from both LogMeIn and GoTo to help us start a planning process that will guide how we bring the two businesses together. This team will jointly make a number of core decisions about the best way to bring our two teams together.

The integration process starts by establishing an integration committee. There will be integration tracks for our functional areas (like Marketing, Sales, Finance, Products, etc.) and we expect to work with a third party advisor for expertise with an integration of this magnitude.

Citrix and LogMeIn's management teams will work closely to establish the right team for the integration process, and some of you may be asked to be a part of the team. More details about the integration process will be communicated in the coming weeks.

How will ongoing business operations be affected during the transition?

It is business as usual for now. Until the transaction closes, we will remain competitors and focused on our customers as we continue to operate our business independently from GoTo and achieve our 2016 goals.

When will I have more information about the integration?

More details about the integration process will be communicated in the coming weeks.
