RURAL ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORT ECHOSTAR-HUGHES MERGER

On October 28, 2001, EchoStar Communications announced definitive agreements for a merger with Hughes Electronics. The combined company will be named EchoStar and use the DIRECTV brand for its services and related products. The new company will offer local broadcast channels, competitively priced broadband service and uniform nationwide prices to every American, and present a stronger competitive challenge to the entrenched cable firms that currently control approximately 78% of the pay television market.

While a number of self-interested parties attempt to block this merger and the benefits that would result, rural Americans have in fact spoken out on its behalf:

the American Farm Bureau Federation believes that the proposed merger is good for rural America. It will help revitalize rural communities and small businesses and improve the quality of life of American farm and ranch families.

- American Farm Bureau Federation

The EchoStar-DIRECTV merger would solve that problem by making broadband easily accessible from every home in every suburb, rural county and inner-city neighborhood in America. The Digital Divide would shrink from a chasm to a small fissure.

- National Alliance of Medical Researchers & Teaching Physicians

It will take a large satellite company that has enough frequency available to it to be able to serve every rural home, school, business, and law enforcement agency in Montana. A merged EchoStar/DIRECTV can do what no one else has been able to do for Montana before. With nationwide pricing guarantees already promised in congressional testimony, the protection we need from unreasonable price hikes can be provided.

- Montana World Trade Center

This [merger] will be a good deal for consumers across our country and a potential lifeline for rural communities who continue to be given reason to worry that they will be left on the wrong side of the digital divide .

In an era that thrives and relies on the ability to access better technology as it is developed, the new EchoStar will be well positioned to close the "digital divide" by providing high speed satellite Internet and broadband service at prices the average family can afford.

- Dean Kleckner, Truth About Trade and Technology

The proposed EchoStar/DirectTV merger is a winner for everyone. Their combined broadcast spectrum would give the new company the technical ability to carry many more local channels. And, of course, that spectrum would let them offer nationwide satellite delivery of high-speed Internet access and other broadband digital services.

Satellite delivery of those services by the merged EchoStar and DirecTV would be a competitive sweetener for areas already served by cable and satellite TV companies. For many rural areas of the West, however, this merger offers the only affordable ticket to the digital future.

- U.S. Senator Malcom Wallop (ret.), Frontiers of Freedom

Equally important, perhaps, the merged firms will have a stronger capability to provide broadband services to rural and other underserved communities, which currently may have no high-speed access to the Web at all and, in so doing, likely spawn competition for these customers as well. In both respects, the merger will further the [Federal Communications] Commission's goal of providing for the reasonable and timely deployment of advanced telecommunications services to all Americans.

- The Progress & Freedom Foundation

Just as our forefathers revolutionized communication for rural America with the advent of mail delivery to isolated areas 105 years ago, this merger has this same potential impact to make city and country equal. Without a network of ponies and riders, there would have been no Pony Express. Without someone having the foresight to lay tracks across the most rugged terrain, there would have been no Iron Horse, and the West would not have opened to civilization. The merger of DISH Network & DirecTV has the potential to be that Golden Spike.

- Patrick Gottsch, President of RFD-TV

One of the biggest economic benefits to the rural community from the Internet, broadband, e-mail and e-commerce is the cost-savings that result from the speed and efficiency with which this technology minimizes distance as a cost factor. Farm businesses are run by people who recognize this fact. We truly need the benefits which will come from this merger.
