To our Inco employees,

I am very pleased to tell you today that Inco and Falconbridge have reached an agreement for Inco to acquire all outstanding shares of Falconbridge, subject to the necessary regulatory approvals. The acquisition, which has been unanimously approved by the Boards of Directors for both companies, will create a new and stronger Inco.

I believe this announcement is very good news for both companies – for our shareholders, our customers, our operating communities and, most importantly, our employees.

Inco is a world leader in the nickel industry – a prestigious position owed largely to the talents and efforts of our employees around the world – and today's acquisition makes us that much stronger.

This deal will not close until the first quarter of 2006. It is conditional on 66 2/3 of the common shares of Falconbridge being tendered by its shareholders. It is also subject to the necessary regulatory clearances from authorities in Canada, the US, and the European Union. However, this is a friendly takeover – we have the support of Falconbridge management and their board and we are optimistic that our offer will be successful.

As employees, you no doubt have a number of questions – many of which we hope to answer for you in the days and months ahead. I can tell you today, however, that we will rely on your talents, your expertise and your commitment more than ever as we embark on making the new Inco the most successful company it can be.

I can also share with you some key strengths we gain by combining our two great companies:

A powerful position in the best metals: The new Inco will become the largest mining company in North America, the world's largest nickel producer and a world leader in copper production – two metals with outstanding market prospects for the short and long-term. We will now have operations on four continents and an unparalleled marketing reach.

Outstanding growth prospects: The new Inco will have one of the best portfolios of properties in nickel and copper in the mining industry, with an enviable range of options for future growth in both metals.

Outstanding synergies: The new Inco has a unique opportunity to realize annual synergies running at some (U.S.) $350 million, notably through a one-time restructuring charge and operational efficiencies available by combining our Sudbury operations and the two companies' administrative functions. These gains are available only to Inco and Falconbridge and we have the ability to achieve them in a way that helps preserve jobs and facilitates long-term growth in the Sudbury basin.

Size and financial strength: The new Inco will be a bigger, stronger company, generating outstanding cash flow, and with the size and financial strength it brings, we can pursue numerous growth opportunities down the road.

I want to assure you that the new Inco will remain committed to the common values of the two companies' safety, respect for the environment, respect and support of the communities where we operate and respect for our people.

Today marks a very important milestone in the history of our company and we are excited by the opportunities going forward. I appreciate that there will be a number of questions left unanswered by this brief note. In a transaction of this magnitude, answers to specific questions may not be clear for some time and I ask for your patience and your support going forward.

You have my commitment that we will continue to keep you informed as events unfold. In the meantime, I invite you to share your observations, your comments or your questions by writing us at employeequestions@inco.com. In North America, employees may also wish to call us at 1-866-203-5138 and leave a message that way. However you contact us, we will make every effort to respond to you as swiftly as possible.

In closing, I want to welcome the 14,500 employees of Falconbridge to the new Inco, and I invite you to do the same. Together, the more than 25,000 of us have a very great future.

Yours truly,
