Employee Communication

The following was distributed to employees of Grey Wolf, Inc. and Precision Drilling Corporation by email on November 14, 2008:

Thanks to everyone who responded with feedback on last week's Integration Memo. Our goal is to send weekly update to answer your questions and report on the Integration Team's activities.

We will continue to send Integration Updates to all Precision and Grey Wolf employees via email and to provide a PDF that can be posted on bulletin boards.

You asked

You asked us to clarify last week's update, which said: We will challenge the new organization to leverage scale to reduce costs, increase revenue and engage our people in a rewarding culture.

Let us be clear. Leveraging scale to reduce costs refers to how we plan for, purchase and deploy resources. For example, we will look for ways to maximize our purchasing power as a larger company to ensure we are getting the best possible value from our suppliers so we can provide the best possible value to our clients.

Leveraging scale to reduce costs is NOT secret code for there will be layoffs. We need all the talent and experience that resides in both our companies to build the new Precision and our goal is to provide real opportunities for all our employees. In fact, we fully expect to continue to recruit more employees so we can realize our vision of being a leading driller and oilfield service provider internationally.

They've seen it all

This week the Functional Project Teams started their work related to Human Resources, Information Technology, Operations, Operational Finance, Corporate, Sales and Marketing, Tech Support and Safety.

The Functional Team leaders introduced themselves to the group by recapping how many years they've worked at either Precision or Grey Wolf and how many mergers and/or acquisitions they've been through in their careers. The numbers were staggering ... in a good way.

These people have been through every possible integration scenario and they know what works and what doesn't. Having been through it all, they're also sensitive to what employees, customers and suppliers want and need to know about the process.

The teams will be putting forward recommendations for decisions and actions required on close, within six months and within six-months to a year of close. We'll provide more details on their plans in future Integration Updates.

Another step towards completing the merger

As you know, we can't complete the merger unless the Grey Wolf shareholders vote in favour of it. Shareholders often follow the recommendation of an independent research group when deciding which way to vote. This week, two major independent research groups - ISS Governance Services and Proxy Governance, Inc. - issued recommendations that shareholders vote for the merger.

Got questions?

If you have questions about the integration process, please ask your supervisor, contact any one of the Functional Project Team leaders (identified on last week's Integration Project Structure chart) or send an email to integration@precisiondrilling.com
