 Total Returns on Net Asset Value

The Allmerica Securities Trust returned (1.06)% for the first quarter of 2005, narrowly underperforming its benchmark, the Lehman Brothers U.S. Credit Index*, which returned (1.05)%. The dividend paid for the period was $0.135 per share.

The first quarter of 2005 was disappointing for both equity and fixed income investors, as negative total returns were experienced by both markets. Oil prices, inflation, real estate and the Federal Reserve Board (Fed) may all have played a role in the outcome. The Fed continued its tightening campaign during the quarter, raising the federal funds rate twice, to 2.75%. Rapidly escalating commodity prices, punctuated by oil, caused many analysts to reassess where they thought interest rates would end the year. Such a development would normally be met by aggressive Fed tightening to prevent widespread inflation pressures. However, the real estate market, which many have called a bubble waiting to explode, tempered any such action. So much of the average American family's net worth is tied to the value of their home that the state of the real estate market may play an unusually large role in shaping consumer confidence and spending patterns. Since the Fed wants to avoid a disastrous downturn in real estate like the one experienced in Japan over the last decade, the Investment Manager thinks that it may tolerate slightly higher inflation and raise interest rates at a slower pace than might otherwise be the case.

The dramatic announcement of the large earnings miss at General Motors (GM) and the subsequent credit downgrade by the rating agencies added to the negative sentiment in the corporate sector. Spreads on GM bonds widened dramatically after the news, casting a pall over the entire sector. Early in the quarter, the Investment Manager sold the Trust's GM holdings, replacing them with General Motors Acceptance Corporation (GMAC), which represents only one-half percent of the total portfolio. Based on the widening of spreads in reaction to the GM news, the Investment Manager added additional Daimler-Chrysler paper to the portfolio, as well as other names which may provide strong income and excess total return due to improving credit quality.

During the quarter, approximately 90% of the portfolio was invested in the corporate sector. Within this sector, the Trust maintained an overweight to below-investment-grade securities, which helped performance on a trailing 12 month basis, but detracted from performance for the period. The Investment Manager believes that a dearth of issuance, continued heavy foreign demand and fundamentals that are still supportive of valuations may enable the corporate sector to rebound during the balance of the year. The remainder of the portfolio was invested primarily in CMO securities, which helped performance.

The Investment Manager believes that monetary policy continues to be quite stimulative and that the Fed has a long way to go just to achieve rate neutrality. Absolute returns may not improve in the near term if the Fed continues its 25-basis point tightening moves at each of its remaining meetings this year. If growth slows meaningfully later in the year for reasons other than rising energy prices, it is possible that the Fed may skip rate increases for a meeting or two. The Investment Manager believes that the key to the outlook for the remainder of the year may be oil prices, but is loath to predict their ultimate direction.
