Whitacre: We've put two great assets together — people of BellSouth and people of AT&T

Ed Whitacre, AT&T chairman and CEO, visited BellSouth on Friday, April 21, for a special program on the pending AT&T-BellSouth merger. BellSouth Chairman and CEO Duane Ackerman hosted the BellSouth Television Network (BTN) program, taped before a live audience of BellSouth employees in Atlanta.

The special program will be broadcast to BTN locations at 1 p.m. Eastern time today, April 24. A list of BTN viewing sites is attached to this e-mail. The program also will be available at 1 p.m. Eastern on the Merger News site of the BellSouth intranet, accessible from my.bls.com and as streaming video at <http://mediaweb.bls.com/btn.asp>

It's a great merger we put together. I believe that. I believe that with all my heart, Whitacre said during the program. If you think about what we've done here, you heard all the statistics, but what we've really done is put two great assets together. That's the people of BellSouth, the people of AT&T, to do the job for the customer and the stockholder going forward.

He noted that the merger, when approved, will bring Cingular Wireless together in one place, and its services can be offered in communications bundles to customers nationwide. The merger also will expand the companies' broadband footprint, and that supports such new offerings as television over the Internet, known as IPTV. In addition, the merger will open new enterprise business markets because of the global reach the combined company can provide to businesses.

We've got some exciting places to go. This is going to be fun — a lot of opportunity with this, he said.

Regarding jobs of BellSouth employees after the merger is closed, Whitacre said he expects little movement of positions in relation to the combined company's total work force: an estimated 300,000. This is a big company; we're a service business. There will be some movement.

It's not huge. In fact, it's quite small when you look at the total.

We're not buying BellSouth for its name. We're buying it because of you, he told employees. The people are what makes the difference.

Whitacre also praised Ackerman and the BellSouth team for their leadership in the industry. You guys just have great performances, he said.

Ackerman noted his long-time professional association with Whitacre, who started with Southwestern Bell as a lineman in 1963. Ed and I believe passionately in what has been put together here, Ackerman said. He also thanked BellSouth employees for staying focused on customers and executing on goals and objectives during the pending merger.
