[Email message from Robert A. Iger, President and Chief Executive Officer of The Walt

Disney Company, to employees of Marvel Entertainment, Inc.]

August 31, 2009

By now you have all heard the news we announced earlier, and I wanted to express my excitement to all of you, which I also plan to do in person in New York later this week.

I am excited about this, because once this deal closes, not only will we combine the great characters and storylines of Marvel with those of Disney, but we will bring together two groups of dedicated and very talented people, and we all know how important people are to companies and to businesses, particularly in creative areas.

To us, Marvel is not only a treasure trove of valuable content, but it is a company with great people, who have created real value by combining excellent creative skills with a strong strategy and a smart, disciplined way of doing business. We feel fortunate to have the opportunity to work with you and we look forward to the potential this combination will offer.

Over the years I've worked at two companies that were acquired by other companies and I know situations like this can create mixed feelings. We intend to approach the integration of our companies smartly, showing respect and appreciation for the people involved, and also looking for opportunities to create long term value. Change can create anxiety, but it can also be exhilarating and result in new opportunities, and I hope that will be the case here.

Personally, I look forward to working with Ike and the people at Marvel I have met and spoken with during the last few weeks. They lead a wonderful team and together we will do great things!

Best wishes,

Bob Iger
