Total Emerson	-5 to 0	-5 to 0	0

November 2012 Orders Comments:

Trailing three-month orders were flat, as cautious business investment continued to reflect global economic uncertainty. Order trends improved in Network Power, Climate Technologies, and Commercial & Residential Solutions, and growth in Process Management continued. Industrial Automation demand remained weak. Currency translation added 3 percentage points. Poor market visibility and mixed economic indicators in the U.S., Europe, and China are expected to result in slow and choppy order patterns in the near term.

Oil and gas, chemical, and power end markets continued to support orders growth in Process Management, as strong results in Asia and the Middle East and Africa offset slowing demand in North America and difficult comparisons. Underlying orders, which exclude favorable currency translation of 8 percentage points, decreased modestly, primarily due to a shorter reporting period compared to the prior year. With comparable reporting days, the pace of underlying orders growth slowed slightly from the previous month. The currency translation impact includes favorable backlog revaluation.

Industrial Automation orders declined as weakness in global capital goods end markets continued, particularly in Europe. The decrease was most severe in the power generating alternators and industrial motors business. Currency translation had a negligible impact.

Improvement continued in Network Power order trends but remained negative, as weakness in global telecommunications and information technology end markets persisted. The rate of decline in Asia and Europe improved in the network power systems business, while end markets in the Americas remained challenged. Favorable prior year comparisons continued to benefit orders growth in the embedded computing and power business. Currency translation had a negligible impact.

Climate Technologies orders grew modestly, as demand in the U.S. and Asia improved. Growth in Europe reflected stabilizing market conditions and favorable comparisons. Refrigeration end markets remained weak. Currency translation had a negligible impact.

Commercial & Residential Solutions orders growth reflected continued solid demand in U.S. residential end markets. Growth was particularly strong in the residential storage and wet/dry vacuums businesses. Currency translation had a negligible impact.
